PREFACE

The modern city is too large and too heterogeneous to use as a unit in the study of social and economic characteristics. Within both the political and the economic boundaries comprising a metropolitan area, there exists a wide variation in the character of the population and in the social and economic conditions manifested. Statistics for the city as a whole represent an average which conceals the extremes and blurs beyond recognition the actual situations as they exist in the smaller local communities.

To facilitate the statistical study of these local communities, Pittsburgh has been divided into 194 small geographic areas, called census tracts. The boundaries of these areas were determined by a detailed study of the homogeneity of the population, of social and economic conditions, and of geographic and political necessities.

The census tract areas may be combined to agree with, or approximate, almost any desired division of the city. Two of the most common types of combinations are into wards and service areas. The ward boundaries were preserved in the establishment of the census tracts, so that recent data could be compared with earlier material collected on a ward basis.

The census tracts have also been combined into 19 community areas, called service areas. These areas have developed their own business and social centers, and provide a nucleus of community life. They are being used as basic units for many types of social planning. A list of the census tracts composing each area, and a map of service areas, is included with this Index.

The boundaries of census tracts and service areas have been established on a permanent basis. The census tracts have been approved by the United States Bureau of the Census. They were enumerated separately in the 1930 Census and will be kept distinct in all future censuses.

The Bureau of Social Research of the Federation of Social Agencies maintains a file of census tract information. Types of data at present available relate to population characteristics, social and economic conditions, housing, rent levels, relief, juvenile delinquency, vital statistics, facilities available for health, recreation and education, organizations functioning in the community, and service statistics of a constantly increasing number of social agencies.

Many types of data have proved amenable to census tract tabulation. The system has been used by commercial firms, civic and welfare organizations, and research workers in social and economic fields.

Acknowledgments are gratefully tendered to the many persons who aided in the preparation of this Index. Special thanks are due to the Division of Surveys of the Bureau of Engineering of the City of Pittsburgh, and to Mr. M. Desmuke of the Works Progress Administration.

Ralph Carr Fletcher, Director
Bureau of Social Research.

HOW TO USE THE CENSUS TRACT INDEX

This Index was prepared to facilitate the tabulation of street addresses by census tract areas. It may also be used in preparing spot maps, as the first step in locating the point on a map which represents any given address.

The Index consists of a list of streets and their appropriate tract designations. Each tract designation includes a number and a letter. The number indicates the ward of which the tract is a part, and the letter distinguishes the different tracts within the same ward. Letters X, Y, and Z are used for tracts annexed since the 1930 Census.

Bold-faced type is used at intervals to assist persons using the Index to locate streets more quickly.

The streets are arranged in alphabetical order according to the name of the street. Several thoroughfares with the same name are listed alphabetically according to their designation as avenue, street, way, etc. The following abbreviations are used:

Avenue	Av.
Boulevard	Blvd.
Circle	Circle
Court	Ct.
Drive	Dr.
Lane	Lane
Park	Pk.
Place	Pl.
Road	Rd.
Roadway	Rdwy.
Row	Row
Square	Sq.
Street	St.
Terrace	Ter.
Way	Way

North, South, East, and West streets are arranged in that order under the name of the street; i.e., South Diamond Street is listed under D, not S. The abbreviations N., S., E., and W., are used.

Names of numbered streets are spelled out and arranged alphabetically, with the exception of compound numbers. All of the twenties, for example, are listed under T; but they are listed numerically, as Twenty-first, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, instead of alphabetically, as Twenty-eighth, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-fourth.

If a street is located entirely within one tract, the tract designation follows the name of the street, e.g.,

Pine St. 16 B

If a street is found in two or more tracts, the limiting house numbers in each tract are given, followed by their respective tract designations, e.g.,

Porterfield St.
1200-1399 22 C
1400-1499 25 D

If a street forms the boundary between two tracts, so that one side of the street is in one tract and the other side is in the other tract, the proper tract designations are given separately for even and odd house numbers, e.g.,

Robinson St.
1-299 even 4 C
 odd 4 A
300-499 5 G

House numbers are arranged in numerical order insofar as possible. In the case of streets having the same numbers in two or more different sections of the street, however, the numbers are given in the order in which they occur on the street. Wherever possible, both old and new numbers are given for streets on which some residents use one, and some another, series of numbers.

If a street is partly in the city and partly outside, the house numbers within the city are given. If only odd or only even numbers are given for a street, the other side of the street may be outside the city, along a railroad, or along a cliff.

No attempt has been made to include street name changes. This list contains only the current legal names of streets, as of the date of publication.

If a street cannot be located, it may at times be found under a variant spelling or a different street designation. Frequently a street may be called "street" for part of its length, and "way" for an additional part of its length. Users making substitutions should realize, however, that any large proportion of them may invalidate the results of a tabulation. Two spellings of a name may indicate different streets in very different parts of the city.

It is impossible to prepare an index such as this without errors, and users will contribute to its value by reporting those they find. The Bureau of Social Research will assist users with any problems which may arise. Information on streets or house numbers not given in the Index may also be obtained from the Division of Surveys of the Bureau of Engineering of the City of Pittsburgh.

Census tract maps and outline maps may be obtained at cost from the Bureau of Social Research.
